

CASE STUDY: Temporary Resident Visa (TRV) – Refusal → Approval

From Two TRV Refusals to a Successful Visa: How VVKARE Rebuilt a Visitor Visa Application with Strategy and Compliance

TRV – Visitor Visa (Refusal Rehabilitation)

Client: S.M. (Mumbai, India)

CASE OVERVIEW

S.M., an Indian national wishing to visit Canada to see his sister and her family, approached VVKARE Immigration (“VVKARE”) after receiving two consecutive Visitor Visa refusals. Both refusals cited concerns under IRPR s.179(b), including:

- Insufficient ties to home country,
- Weak purpose of travel,
- Financial capacity not demonstrated clearly, and
- Perceived risk of overstaying.

The first refusal occurred due to a generic purpose-of-travel letter and incomplete financial documentation. The second refusal stemmed from the applicant attempting a re-application on his own, without addressing IRCC’s original concerns.

S.M. felt discouraged and believed IRCC had formed an irreversible impression of him. He approached VVKARE Immigration seeking a properly structured, compliance-driven TRV application—one that addressed officer concerns, demonstrated a genuine temporary intent, and highlighted his strong personal, financial, and professional ties to India.

What made the case more delicate was that S.M. was a young, single applicant — a profile frequently scrutinized by IRCC. This required a heightened level of documentation, explanation, and strategic preparation to overturn the pattern of refusals.

VVKARE'S STRATEGIC INTERVENTION

VVKARE approached this as a refusal rehabilitation file, understanding that the new application must:

- ✓ Address all previous refusal notes,
- ✓ Reinforce ties to the home country,
- ✓ Establish a credible temporary travel purpose, and
- ✓ Demonstrate financial ability with transparency and clarity.

1. Refusal Analysis & Officer Perspective Review

We began with a detailed breakdown of both refusal letters, identifying inconsistencies, missing evidence, and potential officer red flags. We used IRCC's Program Delivery Instructions to map the concerns to TRV assessment criteria.

2. Building a Strong Temporary Intent Narrative

VVKARE drafted:

- A Purpose of Travel Letter tailored to the applicant's circumstances,
- A Host Invitation Letter with supporting documents,
- A Family Relationship Proof Package, including photos, communications, and affidavits,
- A Travel Itinerary demonstrating short, time-bound plans.

This showed IRCC that S.M. had clear, temporary objectives for the visit.

3. Demonstrating Strong Home-Country Ties

To overcome IRPR s.179(b) concerns, we assembled evidence of:

- ✓ Stable full-time employment with employer leave approval
- ✓ Chartered accountant-verified financial statements
- ✓ Business ownership documents (where applicable)
- ✓ Property ownership records
- ✓ Family responsibilities in India
- ✓ Long-term financial patterns instead of unexplained large deposits

This evidence laid the foundation for a robust temporary intent argument.

4. Financial Strength & Transparency

VVKARE reorganized the financial documents into a coherent, officer-friendly format:

- ✓ 6-month bank histories,
- ✓ Salary slips,
- ✓ Income tax returns,
- ✓ Proof of savings and investments,
- ✓ Sponsor (host) financial documents where necessary.

Each financial entry was supported by explanations, eliminating ambiguity or suspicion.

5. Structuring the Application for Approval

We prepared the application using a legal-file style index, ensuring the submission was:

- Chronologically logical
- Easy for the officer to navigate
- Filled with cross-referenced evidence
- Supported by a Letter of Explanation addressing past refusals transparently

This demonstrated accountability, clarity, and compliance — qualities IRCC expects in a refusal-based reapplication.

THE OUTCOME

Within a few weeks, IRCC approved S.M.'s Visitor Visa application — a significant turnaround after two refusals. The approval confirmed that a well-structured, evidence-backed submission can overcome previous negative outcomes.

S.M. expressed deep gratitude for VVKARE's strategic approach, stating that he “felt seen, understood, and represented in a way that completely transformed the officer's perspective.”

The case demonstrates that experience, precision, and strategic documentation are essential when rehabilitating a refused TRV application — and that an RCIC-led submission carries a level of clarity and credibility that directly impacts approval outcomes.
